The mushroom was beautiful, pristine, stately, reputedly delicious (though you wouldn't live to eat it a second time). But it was a deadly Amanita, a destroying angel, and I left it on the carpet of duff. I filled my basket with woodland agaricus and I littered the ground with discarded destroying angels. A flock of birds swooped.

—from "No Friends of the Heart" "Destroying Angel is a book obsessed with death and the way it etches on our bodies and in our relationships its inevitable progress toward us. Death in these poems is not the feared or veiled Other but a force of resistance we meet in everything, causing us to live in the 'breathless.
